REL 365: Women, Gender, & Religion Nan Carpenter, M.A., M.Div. ONLINE COURSE
The goal of this course is to examine how the feminist study of religion has worked to both recover and re-imagine the traditional and evolving roles that women and gender contribute to the broad concept of "religion" and theological discourse. Though the subject is broad, we will try to give attention to the major themes and intersections of how feminism has addressed the social impact of religion, and gives a glimpse of a spirituality that is authentically feminist. The focus will be on: Gender and Religious experience; origins and identities; Religion, Gender and the Politics of the Body; and on the very categories of analysis: "Gender," "Religion," and "Feminism."
